

him over the finish line in key swing states that exist mostly in the Midwest (Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio) and Southwest (Arizona and Nevada). We're also hearing that many Democrats are now saying that if Trump wins, they will vote against certifying him because they view him as ineligible. Uh-huh. And if Democrats win, Republicans/conservatives will point to mail-in voting and not having an all-paper-ballots system as the reason that they lost.

Either way, a good chunk of the country will have zero faith we can have free and fair national elections. And that ain't a good thing. So here's my proposal:

Let's get rid of electronic voting machines.

Let's go back to paper ballots only.

Let's make Election Day a national holiday and move it to a Monday (three-day weekend!).

Let's allow for mail-in voting, but only for two weeks prior, and only if you're in active military or over the age of seventy.

And finally, in urban areas where long lines have existed in the past, let's invest millions in creating mobile voting sites in the most congested areas to make sure it's a relatively easy process for all.

That's commonsense stuff. But Democrats on Capitol Hill will never allow this to happen. The only way it will happen is if Republicans have control of the House, Senate, and White House. Otherwise, Democrats will block any effort to allow for an orderly and sane process.

And while we're on the subject of common sense, you'll never guess which political TV host and comedian has become the voice of reason of the Democratic Party. . . .
